ABOUSFIAN ABDELRAZIK SCHEDULED TO FLY HOME TO COMPLY WITH STANDING COMMITTEE INVITATION

Civil Society Delegation to Accompany Abousfian Abdelrazik Home on 12 June

Ottawa, 27 May 2009 -- Abousfian Abdelrazik's lawyer Yavar Hameed announced in a press conference in Ottawa today that the stranded Canadian plans to fly home on 12 June 2009 in order to appear at the Standing Committee for Foreign Affairs before Parliament adjourns for the summer. Earlier this month, after a motion introduced by NDP Foreign Affairs Critic Paul Dewar was voted through the Standing Committee for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Abdelrazik was invited to appear before the Committee to testify about his six years of forced exile in Sudan.

Mr. Abdelrazik's flight home has been paid for by a solidarity fund to which over 250 people and organizations from across Canada, including well-known figures such as former UN Special Envoy Stephen Lewis, have contributed, in defiance of the risk of being criminally charged for making a financial contribution to Mr. Abdelrazik, whose name was placed on the UN 1267 "black list" by the Bush administration.

Denis Lemelin, President of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and Ihsaan Gardee, Executive Director of CAIRCAN, announced that their organizations are preparing to help send a civil society delegation to Sudan to accompany Abousfian Abdelrazik home on 12 June. This initiative has already received the endorsement of several high profile individuals, including: Mr. Warren Allmand, former Solicitor General of Canada and human rights advocate; Abdullah Almalki, who, like Mr. Abdelrazik, was detained, interrogated and tortured while on a visit overseas; Maher Arar, victim of "extraordinary rendition"; Monia Mazigh, human rights advocate; and David Suzuki, environmental activist.

Mr. Abdelrazik has been living in limbo in the Canadian Embassy in Khartoum for more than a year. On 3 April 2009, Foreign Affairs Minister Lawrence Cannon refused Mr. Abdelrazik the travel document he needed to board a flight home to Canada, after more than 100 people banded together to buy him a plane ticket home. Mr. Cannon stated that the UN 1267 list prevented Mr. Abdelrazik from flying home, but the UN Coordinator of the Monitoring Team for the list, Mr. Richard Barrett, has since clarified that, "Whether it is Abdelrazik or anybody else, it is up to the state in question whether they want to allow the person to come back or not."

On 7 May, Mr. Abdelrazik's legal team asked the Federal Court to order the government to bring him home by any safe means possible. The Court has not yet rendered its decision.
